

Introduction

As various forms of social media have become commonplace, lawyers increasingly utilize social media and social networks as investigative tools. Various social media such as Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn, and YouTube are potential treasure troves of information concerning opposing parties, witnesses, jurors, opposing counsel, and judges. Use of social media to obtain information in the course of representing clients implicates a number of ethical issues. In many respects, the ethical issues involved in conducting investigations through social media are neither novel nor unique. The Colorado Bar Association Ethics Committee (Committee) recognizes, however, that various jurisdictions and bar associations have expressed differing views about the application of established ethical principles to some aspects of the rapidly-evolving world of investigation through social media. As social media continue to change, and new forms of social media are developed, lawyers should seek guidance from the principles discussed in this opinion and the provisions of the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct (Colo. RPC or the Rules) referenced herein.

This opinion addresses ethical issues that arise when lawyers, either directly or indirectly, use social media to obtain information regarding witnesses, jurors, opposing parties, opposing counsel, and judges. The opinion also addresses circumstances in which lawyers seek to access restricted portions of a person's social media profile or website that ordinarily may be viewed only by permission.

This opinion does not address a lawyer's use of social media for marketing or for disseminating information. This opinion also does not address the extent to which lawyers may have to become familiar with or utilize social media to comply with the applicable standard of care or the ethical obligation to provide competent representation to clients.

Syllabus

A lawyer may always view the public portion of a person's social media profile and any public posts made by a person through social media. A lawyer acting on behalf of a client may request permission to view a restricted portion of a social media profile or website of an unrepresented party or unrepresented witness only after the lawyer identifies himself or herself as a lawyer, and discloses the general nature of the matter in which the lawyer represents the client. A lawyer acting on behalf of a client may not request permission to view a restricted portion of a social media profile or website of a person the lawyer knows to be represented by counsel in that same matter, without obtaining consent from that counsel. When requesting or obtaining information from a third person who has access to restricted portions of a social media profile or website of a party or witness, a lawyer is subject to the same standards as when requesting any other information in the hands of a third person. A lawyer may not request permission to view a restricted portion of a social media profile or website of a judge while the judge is presiding over a case in which the lawyer is involved as counsel or as a party, nor may a lawyer seek to communicate ex parte with a judge through social media concerning a matter or issue pending before the judge. A lawyer may not request permission to view a restricted portion of a social media profile or website of a prospective or sitting juror. A lawyer must never use any form of deception to gain access to a restricted portion of a social media profile or website. Finally, a lawyer may not avoid prohibitions relating to the use of social media for investigative purposes by delegating investigative tasks to others.

Analysis

The Internet has become indispensable for lawyers in the twenty-first century for, among other things, marketing, conducting investigations and legal research, and obtaining general information in connection with the practice of law. Social media are among the many tools available to lawyers for these purposes. Social networks have been defined as follows:

[I]nternet-based communities that individuals use to communicate with each other and view and exchange information, including photographs, digital recordings, and files. Users create a profile page with personal information that other users may access online. Users may establish the level of privacy they wish to employ and may limit those who view their profile page to “friends” – those who have specifically sent a computerized request to view their profile page which the user has accepted.ⁱ

The capabilities, features and security measures available to users of social media are in a constant state of flux. As social media and social networks evolve, ethical issues undoubtedly will arise that will have to be analyzed on a case-by-case basis. Lawyers utilizing social media in the practice of law should stay reasonably informed of these changes and how they may impact their ethical obligations.ⁱⁱ

I. Accessing the Public Portion of a Person’s Social Media Profile and Public Posts Made by a Person in Social Media

Individuals cannot control all of the information, observations, or opinions posted about them on the Internet, including through social media. To the extent they decide to establish their own social media presence, however, individuals generally have some degree of control over the information included. Depending upon the type of social media utilized and the privacy settings available, individuals may exercise some control over the people, or class of people, to whom certain information is available. Some information posted by a person through social media is available to anyone, or almost anyone, who has Internet access. Other information is accessible only to those granted specific permission by the individual who created the profile.

For purposes of this opinion, the public portion of a person’s social media profile or webpage refers to the information posted by an individual through some form of social media that is available to and viewable by anyone with access to the Internet or at least by anyone who subscribes to, or is a member of, the larger social network through which the information is posted. For purposes of this opinion, the restricted portion of a person’s social media profile or website refers to information or portions of the profile accessible to and viewable by only those receiving specific permission from the person who established the profile or posted the information.

Bar association ethics committees that have addressed this issue generally agree that lawyers may view any information publicly posted by a witness, or included on the public portion of that person’s social media profile.ⁱⁱⁱ Such information is treated no differently from any other publicly available information or public record. The Committee believes that the same rule applies to the public portion of a social media profile or posting established by any other individual, including an opposing party, opposing counsel, a judge before whom the lawyer is appearing, or a juror. The Committee concludes that simply viewing the public portion of a person’s social media profile or any public posting made by an individual does not constitute a “communication” with that person. Therefore, the lawyer’s conduct in viewing such material does not implicate any of the restrictions upon communications between a lawyer and certain others involved in the legal system. Similarly, a lawyer may view or utilize information to which the lawyer already has access through the lawyer's social media connections.

Several provisions of the Rules prohibit or limit communications between a lawyer and various types of individuals involved in the legal system. Colo. RPC 3.5(b) prohibits ex parte communications between a lawyer and a judge, juror, prospective juror, or other official by means prohibited by law. Colo. RPC 4.2 prohibits a lawyer who represents a client from communicating about the subject matter of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the same matter, unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer or is authorized to do so by law or a court order. Colo. RPC 4.3 restricts communications between a lawyer who represents a client and a person who is not represented by counsel. The Committee believes that these rules are not implicated when a lawyer reviews or attempts to review the public portion of social media profiles of any of the classes of persons identified in Rules 3.5, 4.2, and 4.3, because the lawyer's actions in such circumstances do not constitute a form of communication with the individual.

In expressing this opinion, the Committee realizes that some social media networks automatically notify a person when someone views his or her profile. In these circumstances, the person whose profile is viewed may also receive information concerning the individual who viewed the profile. Some bar association committees have opined that it is proper for a lawyer to view a juror's social media profile only so long as the juror remains unaware that such investigation is occurring.^{iv} The American Bar Association (ABA) Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility expressed its disagreement with this view, reasoning that in such circumstances, the lawyer is not communicating with the juror. Rather, the social media service is communicating with the juror based on a technical feature of the particular social media, consistent with agreements between the provider and the subscriber.^v The Committee agrees with the ABA's view in this regard. Moreover, the Committee believes that the same logic applies when a lawyer views the public portion of a social media profile or posting of a judge or a person the lawyer knows to be represented by counsel. Judges who maintain a presence on social media should expect that attorneys and parties appearing before them will view the public portion of the judge's profile. Similarly, lawyers should advise their clients to expect opposing counsel or their agents to view the public portions of their social media profiles.

There may be circumstances in which a lawyer might take improper advantage of the fact that a particular individual will receive automatic notification that the lawyer or someone on the lawyer's behalf viewed the individual's social media profile. Colo. RPC 4.4(a) provides that in representing a client, a lawyer shall not use means that have no substantial purpose other than to embarrass, delay, or burden a third person. A lawyer who engages in repetitive viewing of an individual's social media profile could potentially violate Colo. RPC 4.4(a) if the lawyer knew the other person would receive notice each time the lawyer viewed the profile, the lawyer had no other legitimate purpose for the repetitive viewing, and the repetitive viewing rose to the level of harassment or intimidation. To constitute a violation of the Rules, this would have to be an extreme situation, and it would be an exception to the general opinion expressed herein.

II. The Use of Deception to Gain Access to a Restricted Portion of a Social Media Profile or Website

In most respects, conducting investigations or discovery through social media is no different than performing these tasks by any other means. In the course of representing a client, a lawyer shall not knowingly make a false statement of material fact or law to a third person or fail to disclose a material fact to a third person when disclosure is necessary to avoid assisting a criminal or fraudulent act by a client, unless disclosure is prohibited by Colo. RPC 1.6. See Colo. RPC 4.1. It also is professional misconduct for a lawyer to engage in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation. Colo. RPC 8.4(c). Given these clear provisions of the Rules, a lawyer must never use deception to gain access to a restricted portion of a social media profile or website. This prohibition includes "pretexting" and other forms of trickery through which the person seeking access to a restricted portion of a social media profile pretends to be someone other than himself or herself. As stated in an article in the Colorado Supreme Court Attorney Regulation Counsel

Newsletter, “donning an alias and ‘friending’ someone on Facebook to gain access to restricted information is prohibited.”^{vi}

Engaging in any form of deception to gain access to the restricted portion of a person’s social media profile violates Colo. RPC 8.4(c), and also violates Colo. RPC 4.1 if the lawyer’s actions occur during the representation of a client. This type of conduct also may violate Colo. RPC 4.3, which provides that in dealing on behalf of a client with a person who is not represented by counsel, the lawyer shall not state or imply that the lawyer is disinterested. A lawyer assuming a false identity in seeking access to information from a restricted portion of a social media website in a client matter may imply to the person from whom information is sought that the lawyer is a disinterested person. This would create a false impression if the lawyer is actually seeking information from the third party in connection with a client matter.

No exception in the Rules permits a lawyer to employ deception or subterfuge to gain access to restricted information through social media. In In Re Pautler, 47 P.3d 1175 (Colo. 2002), the Colorado Supreme Court clarified that deceitful conduct by a lawyer is never justified, even in exigent circumstances. In Pautler, a deputy district attorney posed as a public defender in order to convince a murder suspect to turn himself in to law enforcement authorities. The attorney believed he was protecting the public through his actions because the suspect already had confessed to multiple killings and was still at large. In the course of affirming the discipline imposed on Mr. Pautler, the Court clarified that lawyers “must adhere to the highest moral and ethical standards, even in circumstances in which they believe that lying serves the public interest.”^{vii}

Lawyers also may not circumvent the prohibition against seeking information through social media by means of deception by delegating investigative tasks to another person. Pursuant to Colo. RPC 8.4(a), it is professional misconduct for a lawyer to “violate or attempt to violate the Rules of Professional Conduct, knowingly assist or induce another to do so, or do so through the acts of another.” A lawyer having direct supervisory authority over another lawyer must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the other lawyer’s conduct conforms to the Rules. Colo. RPC 5.1(b). Rule 5.1(c) also makes a lawyer responsible for another lawyer’s violation of the Rules if the lawyer orders or, with knowledge of specific conduct, ratifies the conduct involved; or the lawyer is a partner or has comparable managerial authority in the law firm in which the other lawyer practices, or has direct supervisory authority over the other lawyer, and knows of the conduct at a time when its consequences can be avoided or mitigated, but fails to take reasonable remedial action. Colo. RPC 5.3 sets forth similar obligations and establishes similar responsibility with respect to non-lawyers employed, retained by, or associated with a lawyer.

Whenever a lawyer employs the services of a subordinate lawyer or a nonlawyer in seeking information through social media, the lawyer must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the person understands the ethical obligations of the lawyer in seeking such information, and complies with those obligations. Subordinate lawyers and nonlawyers performing services for the lawyer must be instructed that they are prohibited from using deception to gain access to a restricted portion of a social media profile or website.

III. Requesting Permission to View a Restricted Portion of a Social Media Profile or Website of an Unrepresented Party or Witness

Viewing a restricted portion of a social media profile generally requires some form of communication with the person who established the profile. Through this communication, the person seeking access communicates a request that may be accepted, rejected, or simply ignored. There is no difference under the Rules between interviewing a person and communicating with that person through social media. Bar association ethics committees and commentators differ regarding the information lawyers must include when requesting access to a restricted portion of a social media profile or website of an unrepresented party or witness. Both the New York City Bar Association Committee on Professional Ethics and the Commercial and Federal Litigation Section of the New York State Bar Association have opined that an attorney or the attorney's agent may use his or her real name and profile to send a "friend request" to obtain information from an unrepresented person's social networking website without also disclosing the reasons for making the request.^{viii} The Oregon State Bar expressed a similar opinion, with the caveat that if the account holder from whom access is requested asks for additional information from the requesting lawyer, or if the lawyer has some other reason to believe that the person misunderstands the lawyer's role, the lawyer must either provide additional information and not state or imply that the lawyer is disinterested, or the lawyer must withdraw the request.^{ix}

On the other hand, the New Hampshire Bar Association Ethics Committee opined that a lawyer's request for access to a restricted portion of a social media profile that discloses the lawyer's name, but not the lawyer's identity and role in pending litigation, is generally improper because it omits material information.^x Although the New Hampshire opinion cited as authority for this conclusion a 2009 Philadelphia Bar Association Professional Guidance Committee opinion, the Philadelphia opinion does not deal directly with the issue of a lawyer seeking access to a restricted portion of a social media profile in the lawyer's own name. Instead, it addresses the propriety of having another person seek access, whose name would not be recognized or associated with the lawyer. The Philadelphia opinion concluded that such conduct would violate Pennsylvania ethics rules that are substantially identical to Colo. RPC 4.1, 8.4(a), and 8.4(c), and would possibly violate the Pennsylvania equivalent of Colo. RPC 4.3 (pertaining to dealing with an unrepresented person).^{xi}

This Committee generally agrees with the New Hampshire opinion. A lawyer who represents a client and requests access to the restricted portion of a social media profile established by an unrepresented party or witness implies that he or she is disinterested if disclosure includes the fact that he or she is a lawyer, but does not include additional information. In regard to communications with unrepresented persons in general, Comment [1] to Colo. RPC 4.3 provides in part:

An unrepresented person, particularly when not experienced in dealing with legal matters, might assume that a lawyer is disinterested in loyalties or is a disinterested authority on the law even when the lawyer represents a client. In order to avoid a misunderstanding, the lawyer will typically need to identify the lawyer's client and, where necessary, explain that the client has interests opposed to those of the unrepresented person.

A person who is a witness or an unrepresented party may not recognize the lawyer by name. A witness may not even be aware of the existence of an ongoing legal dispute or of pending litigation. A person receiving a "friend request" from a lawyer or an agent of a lawyer under these circumstances may be inclined to allow access based upon false assumptions. Other individuals may be more suspicious or protective by nature. In any event, lawyers and their agents must provide sufficient disclosure to allow the unrepresented person to make an informed decision concerning whether to grant access to restricted portions of a social media profile. This means (1) providing the name of the lawyer requesting access or for whom the requesting person is acting as an agent, (2) disclosing that the lawyer is acting on behalf of a client, and (3) disclosing the general nature of the matter in connection with which the lawyer is seeking information. The lawyer also must identify the client if disclosure is necessary to avoid a misunderstanding regarding the lawyer's role. For example, a lawyer representing a party in a personal injury matter seeking access to a restricted portion of the profile of someone identified as a bystander witness would need to provide his or her real name, disclose that he or she is a lawyer, and state that the lawyer seeks access in connection with representation of a client in a personal injury matter in which this person has been identified as a witness. If the lawyer is seeking access to a restricted portion of the social media profile of an unrepresented party, the above-quoted comment to Colo. RPC 4.3 also suggests that the lawyer may have to explain that his or her client has interests opposed to those of the unrepresented party.

The Committee also agrees that an attorney violates the ethical duty not to deceive by requesting access to the restricted portion of an unrepresented person's social media profile without disclosing the reason for the request.^{xii} Some individuals may be willing to allow anyone access to the restricted portion of their social media profile. Other people, however, are more discerning in allowing access to the restricted portions of their profiles. In such cases, the true identity of the person seeking access to the profile and the other information discussed above would be material to the person's decision to grant or deny access. Accordingly, a lawyer's failure to include information concerning the lawyer's identity and the reasons for his or her request could be a misrepresentation by omission. In this regard, Comment [1] to Colo. RPC 4.1, which applies when a lawyer is representing a client, provides in pertinent part that "omissions or partially true but misleading statements can be the equivalent of affirmative false statements."

A lawyer's ethical obligations are different when seeking access to the restricted portion of a person's social media profile for reasons unrelated to either the representation of a client or a legal matter in which the lawyer is personally involved. When, for example, a lawyer seeks to "friend" another person on Facebook for purely social reasons or in connection with professional networking, the lawyer need not disclose the additional information required when doing so with respect to a client matter or a legal matter in which the lawyer is a party.

IV. Requesting Permission to View a Restricted Portion of a Social Media Profile of a Person the Lawyer Knows to be Represented by Counsel

In the course of representing a client, a lawyer may not request permission to view a restricted portion of a social media profile or website of a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in that matter, without obtaining consent from that counsel. Colo. RPC 4.2 prohibits a lawyer, in representing a client, from communicating about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another in the matter, unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer or is authorized to do so by law or a court order. If a request for access to the represented person's social media profile is for the purpose of gaining information for use in the matter in which the lawyer represents a client, then the communication would be prohibited. On this issue, various bar association ethics committees and commentators appear to be substantially unanimous.^{xiii}

As with other forms of prohibited conduct discussed in this opinion, a lawyer may not circumvent the prohibition against contacting a person the lawyer knows to be represented by counsel under the circumstances discussed above by utilizing the services of a third party, including a non-lawyer. Moreover, the prohibitions relating to communications with a person represented by counsel apply even if the represented person initiates or consents to the communication. See Colo. RPC 4.2, cmt. [3]. Accordingly, a lawyer representing a client in a matter must not accept a request to participate in a social media website from a person the lawyer knows to be represented by counsel in that matter. If the lawyer and the person represented by another lawyer are already part of the same limited social network, the lawyer should avoid posting communications relating to the representation might be viewed by the represented party.

V. Requesting Permission to View a Restricted Portion of a Social Media Profile or Website of a Prospective or Sitting Juror

Pursuant to Colo. RPC 3.5(a), a lawyer shall not seek to influence a juror or prospective juror by means prohibited by law. Pursuant to Colo. RPC 3.5(b), a lawyer shall not communicate ex parte with a juror or prospective juror during the proceeding unless authorized to do so by law or court order. As with witnesses and parties, requesting permission to view a restricted portion of a social media profile of a prospective or sitting juror involves a communication with that person. Without express authorization from the court, any form of communication with a prospective or sitting juror during the course of a legal proceeding would be an improper ex parte communication, whether a lawyer or someone else acting on the lawyer's behalf initiates the communication. The same prohibition would apply to communications through social media initiated by a juror. Essentially, communications between a lawyer and a juror through social media are no different than face-to-face communications or telephonic communications between a lawyer and a juror.

After a jury is discharged, the provisions of Colo. RPC 3.5(c) also would apply to communications through social media, just as with any other form of communication between a lawyer and a former juror. Rule 3.5(c) provides that a lawyer shall not communicate with a juror or prospective juror after discharge of the jury if:

- (1) the communication is prohibited by law or court order;
- (2) the juror has made known to the lawyer a desire not to communicate;
- (3) the communication involves misrepresentation, coercion, duress or harassment; or
- (4) the communication is intended to or is reasonably likely to demean, embarrass, or criticize the jurors or their verdicts.

Even if communication with a discharged juror is not otherwise prohibited, lawyers and those acting on their behalf must respect the desire of the juror not to talk with the lawyer and may not engage in improper conduct during any communications through social media. See Colo. RPC 3.5, cmt. [3].

VI. Requesting or Obtaining Information from a Person With Access to Restricted Portions of a Social Media Profile or Website of a Party or Witness

In some circumstances, lawyers or their agents do not have direct access to restricted portions of the social media profile of a party or witness, but may know a third person who does. The lawyer's ethical obligations when dealing with the third person on behalf of a client will partially depend on the status of the third person. Under no circumstances may the lawyer request that the third person make requests for new or additional information from a party or witness if the lawyer would be legally or ethically prohibited from requesting or obtaining it directly. Moreover, the lawyer may not request the third person to engage in deceptive conduct to obtain access to new or additional information from a party or witness through social media. The analysis of such conduct would be the same as under Section II of this opinion.

The Committee believes that the use of social media in this scenario does not significantly alter the lawyer's ethical obligations. Even if the Committee assumes the lawyer is not otherwise prohibited from communicating with the third person, the lawyer must adhere to the same ethical standards that apply whenever the lawyer requests information from a third person who is not a client. A lawyer may advise a client concerning the client's legal rights to access a restricted portion of a social media profile or website. Also, consistent with Colo. RPC 4.2, a lawyer may advise a client concerning direct communications through social media that the client is legally entitled to engage in with another party the lawyer knows to be represented by counsel. See Colo. RPC 4.2, cmt. [4]. However, a lawyer may not simply use the client as a means of communicating directly with a represented party in circumvention of Rule 4.2. See also Colo. RPC 8.4(a).

VII. Requesting Permission to View a Restricted Portion of a Social Media Profile of a Judge Presiding Over a Case in Which the Lawyer Is Involved as Counsel or as a Party

Lawyers are not the only members of the legal profession utilizing social media. A 2013 national survey of state judicial employees reported that 37% of responding judges used Facebook, specifically, to read and consume content, while 23.1% said they posted and commented on personal Facebook pages; and 9.83% of judges who responded said they read and consumed content on Facebook in their professional roles, while 5.33% said they posted or shared content in a professional capacity.^{xiv}

Some ethics opinions have concluded that a judge may be a “friend” on a social networking site with a lawyer who appears as counsel in a case before the judge.^{xv} The Colorado Judicial Ethics Advisory Board has not yet addressed the issue. While it is beyond the scope of this opinion, and beyond the authority of the Committee, to opine on the obligations of judges under the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct, Colo. RPC 3.5 requires lawyers to consider the interplay between a lawyer’s actions and a judge’s obligations and authority under the Code of Judicial Conduct.

Colo. RPC 3.5 also covers communications between a lawyer and a judge during a proceeding before the judge. Lawyers may not seek to influence a judge by means prohibited by law, nor may they communicate ex parte with a judge during the proceeding concerning the matter before that judge, unless authorized to do so by law or court order. See Colo. RPC 3.5(a) and (b). Rule 2.9 of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct, for example, provides that except in limited circumstances, a judge “shall not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications, or consider other communications made to the judge outside the presence of the parties or their lawyers, concerning a pending or impending matter.” Rule 2.4(B) of the Code provides that a judge “shall not permit family, social, political, financial, or other interests or relationships to influence the judge’s judicial conduct or judgment.” Lawyers are prohibited from seeking to influence a judge through improper ex parte communications or any other means that would cause the judge to violate the provisions of the Code of Judicial Conduct.

The Committee believes that Colo. RPC 3.5 does not prohibit lawyers from participating on social networking sites with judges, seeking permission to view restricted portions of a judge’s social media profile, or becoming “friends” with judges through social media during any period in which the lawyer is not appearing in a legal matter over which the judge presides. However, Colo. RPC 3.5 prohibits a lawyer from actively communicating ex parte with a judge during the period the lawyer is appearing as counsel or as a party before a judge, concerning or relating to the matter before that judge. This prohibition would clearly apply to any ex parte communications through social media concerning the legal matter itself, or issues therein, from the time the legal matter is assigned to the judge through the date that the judge’s participation or potential participation in the matter has concluded. A lawyer generally should not send a “friend request” to a judge while the judge is presiding over a case in which the lawyer is appearing as counsel or a party. At least one commentator has recommended that to eliminate any risks and to comply with Rule 3.5, a lawyer and judge who know they are part of the same restricted social network, and who learn that the lawyer is to appear in a matter before the judge, should “un-friend” one another.^{xvi} While the Committee does not believe such steps are mandated, lawyers must be cautious about what they post on any social media network of which they know a judge is a member while they have legal matters pending before that judge.

Conclusion

Social media provide a valuable and powerful investigative tool. Undoubtedly, the various forms of social media existing at the time this opinion is issued will undergo significant changes, and additional forms of social media will be developed. Therefore, it is impossible to address all of the specific features of social media and the ethical obligations of lawyers utilizing them for investigative purposes. In general, lawyers utilizing social media for investigative purposes should be guided by the Rules and should consider how they would apply to other more traditional means of obtaining information and forms of communication.

Formal Ethics Opinions are issued for advisory purposes only and are not in any way binding on the Colorado Supreme Court, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, the Attorney Regulation Committee, or the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel, and do not provide protection against disciplinary actions.
